First-year students are new to this learning environment, and not familiar with the use of facilities like Google Meet and Google classroom. Considering this problem, our department has scheduled this program. Prior Notice about this program has been sent to the student's Whatsapp group. The Brief summary of the program is as follows.:

Coordinator Mrs. Rupali Patil. Welcomed all Faculties and all the students. She conducted the first part of the program i.e. how to use Google meet for attending the lectures. She has shown practically on how to start the google meet, how to join, using various functions and facilities of the same.

The next part of the program was on " How To use Google classroom to access and share the data". Mrs Leena Firake has guided the students and has demonstrated the practical use of the classroom.

Both the faculties then attended doubt-solving sessions. After the program, students have expressed that they can use both applications confidently. 62 students have attended the program. The program was concluded with a vote of thanks.
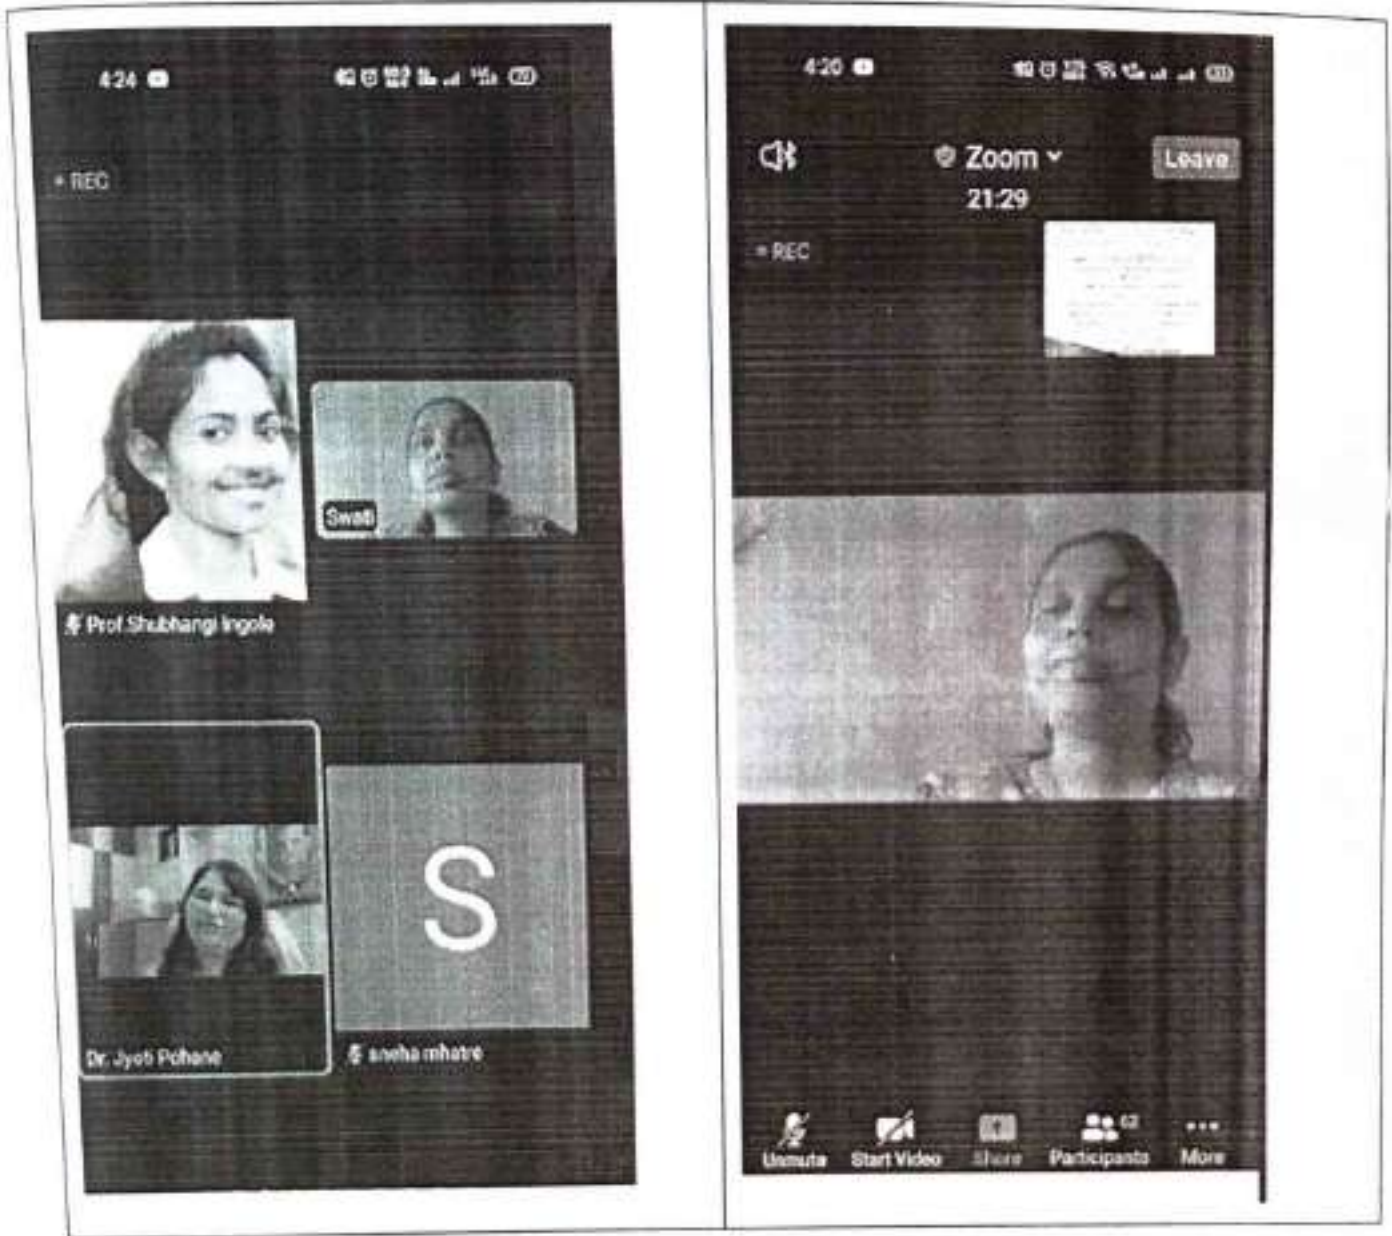

Mrs. Rupali Patil.

We therefore consider the decision variables

- P_{it} = units of product i to be manufactured in period t,
- I_{it} = units of product i in inventory at the end of period t,

and the parameters

- d_{it} = demand for product i in period t,
- c_{it} = unit manufacturing cost for product i in period t,
- h_{it} = unit inventory cost for product i in period t,
- e_i = capacity absorption to manufacture a unit of product i,
- b_t = capacity available in period t.

Constraints (14.2) express the balance conditions among production, inventory and demand, by establishing a connection between successive periods along the planning horizon. Inequalities (14.3) constrain the absorbed capacity not to exceed the available capacity for each period.

Model (14.1) is a linear optimization problem which can be therefore solved efficiently even with a very large number of variables and constraints, of the order of a few million, by means of current state-of-art algorithms and computer
